Where is everyday life still exciting?

Just imagine, after all those years working for your company and you're not offered a golden watch.

Instead, the chance to go abroad with more money, a larger office and a beautiful house.

And then you start from scratch with a big difference: your pockets are full of cash and you can afford everything you, your wife and your kids ever desired.

That's exciting.

Where does knowledge really have power?

Among all those who have just arrived to start a new job, but know little about their new surroundings.

People who have a lot of money and have to completely re-orient themselves: everything from the bank to a new car, from clothes and suits to new cultural and leisure activities.

If you tell this small, extremely active and consumption oriented target group where something special exists, then you and your business have a mighty head start.

As a local businessman, how can I overcome intercultural differences?

By being aware that there are tens of thousands financially sound people in Beijing who speak barely a word of Chinese yet are nevertheless keen on getting to know what you have to offer.

And they are all starting from scratch with pockets full of money.

Why am I talking to 10,000 if I am only looking for 100?

Are you booking ads in regional daily newspapers?

Those tiny, rectangular, hard-to-find, very expensive, helpless appeals to consume?

Do you want to hear a figure on coverage waste? No? That we understand!
